Highlights

ICC Commission's latest Report on Financial Institutions and International Arbitration reflects financial institutions' perceptions and experience of international arbitration.

Arbitration, with its flexibility and worldwide enforcement, has the potential to become the preferred dispute resolution method for the world's corporate and investment banks. This one-of-a-kind interdisciplinary Report addresses the potential benefits of international commercial arbitration in banking and financial matters and some common misperceptions about the process. It concludes with a series of detailed recommendations for tailoring the arbitration procedure to suit the needs of the banking and finance sectors.

The report offers an analytical survey of arbitration in twelve banking and financial sectors and products spanning all CIB financing, capital markets, asset management and advisory mandate fields. It is the linchpin of a new approach to dispute risk management in international banking and finance.
